Pets are much more than just animals in the United States. As of 2024, 70% of U.S. households (86.9 million homes) own a pet. That's up from 56% in 1988. Over the past few decades, the bond between Americans and their pets has deepened significantly. A growing number of Americans consider their pets to be family members. According to recent surveys, nearly 80% of pet owners say they see their cats, dogs, and other pets as part of the family, 10% as best friends, 7% as companions, and 3% as property. This emotional connection drives people to include pets in family events, buy them holiday gifts, and even celebrate their birthdays. The trend is also reflected in consumer behavior. The profit in the U.S. pet industry is over $140 billion in 2023. People are willing to pay more to make their pets happy and healthy, including buying healthy treats for pets, taking them to spa treatments, and arranging a pet-friendly vacation.

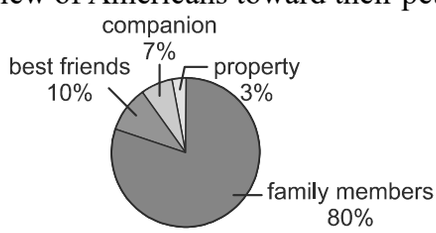

For many Americans, pets give them health and emotional benefits, especially in the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic. The role of pets includes providing companionship, reducing stress, and relieving loneliness. Without a doubt, these pets are the best friends to mankind.

Children should lead a carefree life and go to school without being forced to work in a factory or mine. Many children in developing or underdeveloped countries, however, suffer from illegal child labor. They work in dark factories or dangerous environments, instead of going to school to receive education and enjoying their childhood. This is a big problem in many parts of the world. They do hard jobs for many hours and often get very little money. This is a big problem in many parts of the world.

Most children who work like this come from poor families. Their parents may not have enough money to feed the family, so the children must help by working. Some children also become victims of child labor because they are not protected by the laws. Child labor is harmful to children in many ways. It affects their physical and mental health. They may get hurt while working; even worse, they miss school, so they don't get the education they need to have a better future.

There are laws in many countries to stop child labor, but the problem still exists. Organizations such as the United Nations and UNICEF work to protect children's rights and help end child labor. Everyone can help by raising awareness. As consumers, we should learn about where the products we buy come from and support companies that do not use child labor.

Children deserve a safe, happy, and healthy life. They should be in school, not working in dangerous places. Let's make a joint effort to end child labor. It may not be easy, but with more care and action, ending child labor is possible.

36. Which design of the posters best matches the issue of the passage?

(B)

(D)

37. Based on the passage, which of the following is one of the dangers child labor poses?
(A) Children becoming too poor　　(B) Children not having enough sleep
(C) Children missing out on education　　(D) Children developing many bad habits

38. How can we help stop child labor according to the passage?
(A) By helping the UN to make laws to stop child labor
(B) By donating money to poor families in need
(C) By reporting companies that use child labor to the police
(D) By raising awareness and supporting companies avoiding child labor

Most teenagers hang out with friends after a busy school day, relaxing with music, games, or social media. 17-year-old Maya Lin from California, however, chose a different path when she happened to read a poster released by the World Health Organization (WHO). She works on her invention that changes lives with a low-cost, solar-powered water purifier, which would bring clean drinking water, especially to those in the third world. Her AquaSpark project began as a science fair idea.

After learning that lots of people globally lack access to safe and clean drinking water, Maya was determined to find a simple, affordable solution. Using basic materials like charcoal, sand, and solar panels, she created a system that effectively filters out bacteria and harmful chemicals. To our surprise, each unit costs less than $30 to build.

The Global Youth Innovation Award praised Maya Lin for her extremely creative and practical measures to solve an urgent issue around the world. Judges were impressed not just by the technology but by her mission and commitment to make the design open-source and available for communities in need, especially in developing countries.

Maya delivered a speech at the award ceremony, saying that young people could make a difference with creativity, compassion, and a little bit of science. She wanted to prove that she doesn't need a big company or a huge lab to solve real-world problems. She is now planning to work with non-profit organizations to give out the purifiers to rural areas in Southeast Asia and parts of Africa. She is also developing an online guide so that students and teachers across the world can build their versions of the water purifier.

Her story has already inspired thousands of teens online. Social media is filled with the hashtag "#BeTheSpark," encouraging youth to take action on global issues and become changemakers in their communities, just like what Maya Lin did.

39. What is the main purpose of Maya's invention?
(A) To provide affordable clean water　(B) To make science fun for teenagers

40. What information is correct based on the poster?
(A) The UN aims to achieve equal water resources by 2030.
(B) The majority of the world's population have to spend time collecting water.
(C) More than half of the world's population doesn't have drinking water services.
(D) Less than 2 billion people don't have access to clean water.

41. Why did Maya Lin make the design open-source?
(A) To protect her creation　(B) To make it a limited deal
(C) To allow widespread use　(D) To charge for online instructions

42. Which of the following questions is NOT answered in the passage and the poster?
(A) Why did Maya get an innovation award for young people?
(B) Which country suffers from a lack of clean water the most?
(C) How much does it cost to build a simple water purifier?
(D) What materials are needed to make a simple water purifier?
